Bitter love - "amore amaro"

Admittedly, a bitter flavour is not usually love at first sight. Especially not nowadays, when bitter substances have largely been bred out of our food.

Originally very bitter vegetables such as endive, radicchio, chicory or kale hardly taste bitter today. We are no longer used to the bitter flavour and therefore don't like it, at least not right away. However, we can get our taste buds used to the almost lost flavour again and develop a new love for bitterness.

Bitter substances can support your digestion as follows:

- they promote the flow of saliva
- stimulate the production of gastric juice,
- stimulate the production of bile and thus favour the digestion of fat and
- stimulate intestinal activity.

Supplementation with bitter substances is particularly important for:

- People whose eating habits rarely include bitter foods
- People who want to get used to the bitter taste again,
- People who want to support their digestion.
